Story Patterns in Greek Tragedy

RICHMOND LATTIMORE

'Drama is shaped . . . by certain formal conditions or formal limitations . . . patterns of story as it were. . . . The story itself, as an ordered series of events, has its own rights.' In his new book Professor Lattimore outlines certain types of drama, such as the foundling story, the revenge play, the sacrificial play, the story of the indestructible man, and illustrates them by reference to Greek tragedy and other kinds of fiction with which tragedy shares some of its narrative forms and rules.
